Origin

The Union of BC Municipalities Community Health Promotion Fund, announced in 2005, was created through a one-time $5 million grant from the provincial Ministry of Health through ActNow BC. The goals of the Fund are to:

- assist communities to build skills and abilities needed to address their own health promotion priorities;
- strengthen collaboration between local government, health authorities and non-governmental health related organizations in protecting and promoting the health of their citizens; and
- support innovation, best practice development, information sharing, and networking with regards to health promotion

Analysis

The City of Richmond submitted a preliminary project proposal, “Building Community Capacity – Walking for Health” to the Union of BC Municipalities for the Community Health Promotion Fund in September 2006 (Attachment 1). A total of 144 submissions were reviewed and ranked against the criteria specified in the funding guidelines. Community experience and capacity, as well as size and geographic location were also taken into account in order to ensure equity in the allocation of funds. Of the 51 communities selected, Richmond was chosen to proceed to the final proposal stage for Round 2 under the Community Health Promotion Fund. A Council resolution is required as part of the Round 2 application process.

Since City Council made a commitment to accept the Premier’s challenge to increase physical activity by 20% by 2010, as well as to ensure Richmond is “the best place in North America to raise children and youth”, the City has been working with key partners (Richmond Health Services, Richmond School District) to advance the vision and commitment. When the Union of BC Municipalities sent a notice and funding guidelines to all municipalities, the partners felt that even though there are already a significant number of individual initiatives that contribute to health promotion and a healthy community, it was a prime opportunity to collaborate to make connections, build upon the various initiatives and create long-term change and measurable results in the community.

The City of Richmond, working with its key partners has outlined the goal of mobilizing the community to build a healthy Richmond. Together, the partners have agreed to work collaboratively and provide community leadership towards these common themes. Building Community Capacity – Walking for Health will build upon the culture of community collaboration to mobilize the entire community around these themes.

The goals of the project are:

1. To build a legacy of healthy lifestyles in Richmond by engaging people in life-long walking which promotes and supports individual health and a commitment to community health and wellness.

2. To meet the Premier's challenge and commit to increasing the portion of British Columbians who are physically active by 20% by 2010 and to achieve the City's vision "to be the best place in North America to raise children and youth."
3. To develop community walking programs that focus on increasing the physical activity levels of our many target markets (children, youth, adult, older adults).
4. To partner with local businesses to create walking maps that highlight local attractions.
5. To capitalize on the opportunities created by existing promotional events (e.g. Mayor's Walk, Move for Health Day, International Walk to School Day, Way to go! School program).
6. To increase awareness and educate the community about the opportunities for safe, affordable, and accessible walking experiences (green spaces, dykes and trails, safe sidewalks and communities, school and community centre programs, workplace wellness programs) – removing barriers to participation.
7. To develop a "community report card" that will be used as a performance measurement tool.

This initiative will lead the collective action of community partners in making Richmond a healthy community through physical activity. Four key components of the initiative will be to build community partnerships, build community awareness, target community strategies and measure our success. By focusing on these components, a long-term sustainable approach, supported by the community will ensure that Richmond is "the best place in North America to raise children and youth" and that the level of physical activity is increased by 2010.

Financial Impact

The (amount of grant applied for) will cover all costs related to this program other than staff time to participate in the process.

Conclusion

Coordinated and broad reaching efforts are needed to ensure that families in the community are supported in increasing their physical activity. "Building Community Capacity – Walking for Health" will integrate the efforts of key organizations in the community and build capacity within the broader community to significantly contribute to improving individual health and the overall health in our community and increasing the level of physical activity by 2010. The provincial government, through a grant to the Union of BC Municipalities is offering funding to support projects to create healthier communities.

Re: Community Health Promotion Fund - Pilot Projects

The City of Richmond is pleased to submit a proposal for the above-mentioned program. The Richmond Building Community Capacity - Walking for Health project will build upon the strong commitment the City and its partners have to making a significant contribution to improving the health of our community. This project focuses on integrating the efforts of key organizations in the community and building capacity within the broader community.

Richmond City Council has made a commitment to the provincial goal of increasing physical activity by 20% by 2010, as well as to ensuring Richmond is "the best place in North America to raise children and youth". They have directed staff to adopt the Asset Based approach and to work with others in our community to create a community that is safe and healthy for children and youth to grow up in.

Through this project, the five collaborating organizations intend to lead the collective action of community partners in making Richmond a healthy community through physical activity. This project will make a significant contribution to provincial government's ActNow BC initiative and its overall goal of building community capacity to create healthier, more sustainable and economically viable communities.

We look forward to your support of the Richmond Health Promotion project.

Yours truly,

George Duncan

PROJECT NAME (BRIEF DESCRIPTION)

Building Community Capacity – Walking for Health

The City of Richmond, working with its key partners outlined below, has the goal of mobilizing our community to build a healthy Richmond. The City has adopted the vision “to be the best place in North America to raise children and youth” as well as accepted the Premier's challenge “to increase physical activity by 20% by 2010” and key partners have agreed to work collaboratively and provide community leadership towards these common themes.

This initiative will build upon a culture of community collaboration to mobilize the entire community around these themes. While the community of Richmond is well-known for working collaboratively and already has a significant number of individual initiatives that contribute to health promotion and a healthy community (Attachment 1), there needs to be something that makes connections between the various initiatives to build upon one another and to create long-term change and measurable results in the community.

Building Community Capacity –Walking for Health will lead the collective action of community partners in making Richmond a healthy community through physical activity. Four key components of the initiative will be to build community partnerships, build community awareness, target community strategies and measure our success. By focusing on these components, a long-term sustainable approach, supported by the community will ensure that Richmond is “the best place in North America to raise children and youth” and that the level of physical activity is increased by 2010.

The personal and health benefits that individuals will receive from integrating walking into their every day lives is well documented:

- physical activity increases the individual's energy level and affects their ability to fully participate in school, work, play, social activities and family life. It also reduces stress and promotes psychological well-being. Health body, healthy mind.
- physical activity decreases the chances of developing numerous chronic health conditions e.g. hypertension, coronary heart disease, stroke, osteoporosis, osteoarthritis, and diabetes.
- physical activity helps to control body weight, increase flexibility and improve coordination, which reduces the risk of falls.
- active living can reduce pollutions when more people decide to walk, in-line skate and cycle rather than use their cars. Environmental modifications have the potential for creating sustainable change.

The goals of the project are:

1. To build a legacy of healthy lifestyles in Richmond by engaging people in life-long walking which promotes and supports individual health and a commitment to community health and wellness.
2. To meet the Premier's challenge and commit to increasing the portion of British Columbians who are physically active by 20% by 2010 and to achieve the City's vision "to be the best place in North America to raise children and youth."
3. To develop community walking programs that focus on increasing the physical activity level of our many target markets (children, youth, adult, older adults).
4. To partner with local businesses to create walking maps that highlight local attractions.
5. To capitalize on the opportunities created by existing promotional events (e.g. Mayor's Walk, Move for Health Day, International Walk to School Day, Way to go! School program).
6. To increase awareness and educate the community about the opportunities for safe, affordable, and accessible walking experiences (green spaces, dykes and trails, safe sidewalks and communities, school and community centre programs, workplace wellness programs) – removing barriers to participation.
7. To develop a "community report" that will be used as a performance measurement tool.

The Richmond Review understands the importance of building community capacity to support the health of our residents. As a local community partner we fully support the City of Richmond proposal to build a healthy Richmond and will assist in the implementation of this project.

Promoting healthy eating and regular physical activity is essential to reversing the trend of overweight and obesity. However, getting people to change eating habits, off the couch and involved in physical activity has been quite a challenge for Canadians in recent years. Our newspaper is pleased to be part of the culture of collaboration that allows Richmond to implement initiatives, which support our residents in making long term changes to their physical activity levels.

The Heart and Stroke Foundation of BC & Yukon understands the importance of building community capacity to support the health of our residents. As a community partner we fully support the City of Richmond proposal to build a healthy Richmond and will assist in the implementation of this project.

Coordinated and broad reaching efforts are needed to ensure that families in this community are supported in increasing their physical activity. Our agency is pleased to be part of the culture of collaboration that allows Richmond to implement initiatives which support our residents in making long term changes to their physical activity levels.

The Heart and Stroke Foundation of BC & Yukon is pleased to lend our support to Building Community Capacity- Walking for Health. As a community, Richmond has adopted the vision

"to be the best place in North America to raise children and youth" and has embraced the Premier's challenge "to increase physical activity by 20% by 2010". Our agency welcomes the opportunity to be one of many community partners that will support this project and build long term capacity for our residents to increase their individual health and the overall health of the community.

Sincerely,

Re: UBCM Community Health Promotion Fund, City of Richmond proposal, Building Community Capacity - Walking for Health

I write in support of the City of Richmond proposal "Build Community Capacity-Walking for Health".

The Way to Go! School Program is a safe and active transportation initiative designed to support Parent Advisory Councils (PACs), principals, teachers and students as they create safer traffic environments around elementary and middle schools in B.C. An important and successful strategy is to reduce the number of vehicles at the school site by promoting safe walking to school. In Richmond we have significant partnerships with parents, the school district, ICBC, RCMP, Vancouver Coastal Health and the City of Richmond to help school communities become safe walking communities. We are very pleased to extend this focus in Richmond.

The Way to Go! School Program recognizes the importance of building community capacity to support the health of residents. In Richmond, working with community partners we help develop safe routes to school, walking school buses and walk to school event days, and we provide pedestrian, bicycle and traffic safety education resources. We fully support the City of Richmond proposal to build a healthy Richmond and will support the implementation of this project.

The Way to Go! School Program is pleased to lend our support to Building Community Capacity- Walking for Health. As a community, Richmond has adopted the vision "to be the best place in North America to raise children and youth" and has embraced the Premier's challenge "to increase physical activity by 20% by 2010". The Way to Go! School Program welcomes the opportunity to be one of many community partners to support this project which will build long term capacity for our residents to increase their individual health and the overall health of the community.
